Caltrans presents new Troy/Palm ramp design, receives solid opposition

by Lindy Magner

Tuesday night, a crowd packed the City Council chambers, mainly to hear a Caltrans presentation on the planned state Route 125 extension which includes access ramps which many would prefer seeing moved slightly south, out of the city's boundaries.

Pam Klos, Caltrans project manager, accompanied by Caltrans Deputy District Director Sheldon Craig, gave a presentation on a new design alternative for the Troy/Palm ramp which they feel will lessen the impact of traffic on surrounding streets.

Presented last month to a citizen's group opposed to the ramp, the design would eliminate left turn accesses.

"The main complaint we were hearing was about increased traffic to the area, so we tried to reduce that impact. With the new plan, there would be no reason for people to cut through this neighborhood to access the freeway," Klos said, adding that "No U turn" signs would be posted to discourage cars from trying to find shortcuts through surface streets.

However, any design for Troy/Palm could not please many in the room, including Mayor Brian Cochran, who feels that since it's Spring Valley leaders who desire this interchange, it should be moved southerly so it lies completely within that community.

"If Spring Valley wants a ramp, they should offer up the property for it. It's very important that Caltrans and county Supervisor Dianne Jacob understand that this is not to go in Lemon Grove. We want Lemon Grove to be left alone - that's not asking a lot. This (ramp) is promoted by Spring Valley people who are dreaming of a commercial area there," he said, noting that the neighborhood it will impact is one of the oldest and "most pristine" in the city.

Since Caltrans first adopted the design alternative which includes the Troy/Palm interchange, the Lemon Grove City Council has unanimously opposed its construction, stating publicly, as well as to Caltrans engineers, that it would not sign the freeway agreement needed before Caltrans can construct a ramp here.

However, Caltrans also needs a freeway agreement with the county for the construction.

"You know you need both freeway agreements; the easiest thing for Caltrans will be to dump this before a judge and let the court decide; we don't want litigation," Cochran said.

Sheldon Craig responded that litigation is not something Caltrans wants as a solution.

"We want to try to work this out without going before a judge; we haven't closed the door on finding a solution," he said.

However, he noted that there have been some cases in California in which Caltrans has proceeded with projects without securing freeway agreements, aided by "special legislation."

"But, we have no intention to do that in this case. We don't want to shove it down you're throats," Craig added.

Cochran stated that at the San Diego Association of Governments (SANDAG) board meeting Friday, he will urge the board to transfer the funding for the state Route 125 extension to the state Route 52 project, thus delaying the extension project a few additional years. SANDAG's transportation subcommittee recently recommended against that transfer of funds.

Klos said that to eliminate the Troy/Palm ramp from the freeway design would cause other interchanges to "break down" once Caltrans' projections of expected traffic utilizing the extension were realized.

Cochran replied that traffic projections for the freeway are based on Spring Valley's hopes of a commercial center which will draw customers, as well as on rosy forecasts made before the current economic slump.

Councilman Bob Burns noted that if the city can't say no to an interchange, he would prefer having the Ildica interchange which was included in the alternative design which Caltrans was considering before selecting its final design variation.

"Even though it would take out a bunch of homes, I'd rather have it at Ildica then where it will be near three schools," he said.

However, the final Environmental Impact Report is expected to receive federal approval by mid-August, and does not include the previous alternative route.

The first phase of the project is set to begin next summer, with ramp and major freeway construction set for 1999; completion is expected in 2003.

Rev. Ken Gosselin, pastor of the Lemon Grove United Methodist Church, but better known countywide as "Dolly the Clown," has been transferred to a church in Los Angeles County. In recognition of his 20 years of "clowning around," the Lemon Grove City Council presented him a proclamation at Tuesday's council meeting. The long-distance commute will reduce Dolly's appearances in the county, but don't count the old gal out - It's not over til the fat lady sings.

Zoning change to include more than motel

by Lindy Magner

By approving amendments to the city's general plan and zoning ordinance which will allow the owner of a financially troubled and crime-ridden motel to convert his 1.48-acre property to apartments, the City Council also will change the zoning for nearly nine additional acres in that eastern Broadway area.

Tuesday night, council directed staff to draft a resolution which would amend the general plan and zoning ordinance; that resolution will be brought to the council for approval at its July 19 meeting.

According to Community Development Director James Butler, his staff was "obligated" to examine the rezoning of surrounding properties when considering a zoning change from general commercial to medium/high residential for National 9 Inn, 8429 Broadway.

"Interest in this area has been for residential uses, not commercial," said Butler. Last month, the Planning Commission voted in favor of rezoning 10 acres located on the southeast side of Broadway's 8300 and 8400 blocks.

Mayor Brian Cochran inquired, "What becomes of properties already developed (within that acreage) as commercial?"

Butler responded that they would be considered "nonconforming uses" and would be prohibited from expanding, as well as unable to rebuild if more than 50 percent of their structure was damaged.

He added that most businesses already in that area are non-conforming, because they involve "heavy commercial" uses.

Though two of the three council members present expressed concern about rezoning the additional acreage, they agreed that changing the zoning for the motel was in the city's best interest.

"I'm appalled at the Sheriff's statistics on crime there; that motel has been a nightmare to law enforcement for years," said Mayor Brian Cochran.

"This is probably the best solution for that property - whether we need to included all 10 acres, I don't know, but I'll defer to the Planning Commission's decision," he added.

Councilman Bob Burns favored changing the zoning for the National 9 Inn property alone, and voted against Cochran's motion to rezone the 10 acres. Councilwoman Lois Heiserman voted with Cochran.

Before making its decision, council held a public hearing on the issue.

Representing three of his neighbors, Fairway Drive resident Gene Sprofera asked council to deny Neill's zoning change request and instead, let that property be used for commercial purposes as it was originally zoned.

"This area is a little patch which was left when Caltrans got done (constructing the adjacent freeway); it;'s a good commercial spot" he said, adding that the existing apartments in the area are "public nuisances" and more apartments were not needed.

Gerald Jones, who operates an auto body shop within the 10 acres, expressed concern that the

With hesitation, council passes new budget

by Lindy Magner

Though its passage was uncertain for a moment or two, the budget for fiscal 1994-95 was approved by a City Council short two of its five members.

Thanks to an upturn in the city's sales and property tax revenues, the $5.86 million budget is not the "bite the bullet" type of the past several years which caused the city to dip into its reserve fund.

According to City Manager Doug Yount, though some expenditures have increased, the city will have $350,000 in general fund revenues to spend on increased services, as well as provide raises for city employees.

He proposed that $95,000 be used to upgrade the city's law enforcement contract with the Sheriff's Department by replacing the "five-day a week without relief" deputy position with a "seven-day with relief" position, thus adding an average of 1,200 hours of coverage.

Also, Yount recommended restoring some of the city's grounds maintenance staff which

Cypress Avenue parking restricted to east side

With several options before it, the City Council voted Tuesday night to solve a narrow street's problem by prohibiting parking on its east side.

The restriction will apply to Cypress Avenue, between San Miguel Avenue and Burnell Court. Previously, parking was permitted on both sides of the street, making two-lane travel impossible. Council could have declared the street one-way, but favored posting no parking signs on the east side, with a review of the issue in 90 days, if warranted.

City Engineer Les Ruh said Cypress Avenue lots are too small to allow additional parking facilities.

in the last three years, has shrunk from three to one employee.

As well as adding a fulltime grounds worker position, a part-time position of work-release supervisor would be created so the city could better utilize workers form the Sheriff's prisoner work-release program. Also, a van to transport abut 15 to 20 such workers as well as a trailer carrying the required toilet facilities for laborers, would be purchased.

Yount also recommended creating a new accountant position for the city's finance department which lost an account clerk several years ago.

For existing employees, Yount requested a 4 percent pay raise, noting that due to no pay raises for most since 1991, salaries for non-management positions were now 15 percent below the average for similar-size cities in the county, though only 10 percent behind when compared strictly to East County cities.

Management positions have fallen 17 percent below the average for small cities in the county; 14 percent below East County cities, he said.

Also, about $35,000 will be expended in salary raises resulting from a "reclassification" of certain employees in an effort to make uniform the pay scales offered in all city departments.

"As it is, we have people in different department who perform comparable tasks, but one is at one level in compensation and the other is at a level far below," Yount explained.

Other increases include $10,000 for the City Attorney to cover what Yount expects to be a heavier litigation load due to his desire to make the city more "hard-line" in dealing with code enforcement violators.

Because two council members - Craig Lake and Jerry Legerton - were absent, Councilman Bob Burns suggested that approval of the budget be delayed at least until the next council meeting.

He read a written statement by Lake which said he had "reservations about the budget," especially concerning the reclassification of employees which "raises the base salary for numerous positions."

"This will be the largest collective pay increase in the history of Lemon Grove," his letter read, ending with a request to delay the matter to the next council meeting.

Councilwoman Lois Heiserman said she felt the new council, elected June 7 and set to take office July 5, should be the ones approving the budget.

Mayor Brian Cochran said that the budget had been in "the discussion stage" for months, and it's the current council's job to take action.

"I don't think you'll see any big budget battles, with the new council wanting to make a lot of changes," he said.

Yount noted that either this budget or "some spending authority" needed to be approved by July 1 or city paychecks would stop.

"I would strongly recommend that you go forward with the budget, either at this meeting or the June 28 meeting," he said.

Burns held out in his opposition; Heiserman decided to favor the budget's passage along with Cochran.

Yount reminded council that the budget can be amended at anytime.

Rezoning

vacant property adjacent to his shop may be developed for apartments. He noted that several years ago the council voted down an apartment project for that parcel, and he requested that council exclude that parcel from the rezoning plan. He fears that if apartment are build, battles over noise from his shop would ensue.

In his testimony, National 9 Inn owner John Neill detailed his financial problems which may lead to his property entering foreclosure should his zoning change request be denied. He said that due to a proliferation of motels and hotels in the San Diego area, coupled with the bad economy, his occupancy rate has fallen to 50 percent, filled mostly by low-income people, not tourists.

Neill said deputies refer to his property as "the place where criminals hang out."

"If I have an apartment building, then I can screen the tenants for suitability and the property will be better for the community, If I don't get this change, the lender will foreclose and a new buyer will pick up the property at a low price and rent the units at a lower rate. What type of people do you think you'll get then?" he warned.

To lower the density of his property in keeping with the regulations for medium/high residential zoning, Neill will be reducing the motels 63 units to 41 apartments by combining some of the units. Built originally as one-bedroom apartments, units already have kitchens and living rooms as well as bathrooms.

Smog season has arrived

The arrival of summer weather conditions signals the beginning of the smog season in Southern California and San Diego County.

In the warm months between now and November, a blanket of hotter desert air covers stagnant marine air and traps the pollution. Intense summer sunlight bakes these raw emissions into photochemical smog.

Smog levels increase as this inversion layer of warm air prevents cooler coastal air near the earth's surface from rising. Smog levels peak in early afternoon and often persist until late afternoon, especially between the elevations of 1,500 and 2,500 feet from Palomar Mountain to Mexico.

When smog levels reach 84 on the pollution standards index (PSI), state clean air standards for healthful air are exceeded. California's standards are stricter than those used nationwide. Motor vehicles account for about 60 percent of San Diego's smog-forming emissions.

"There may be an increase in the number of unhealthful days this smog season compared to last year," said Air Pollution Control Officer Richard Sommerville.

"The warm water El Niño condition in the ocean has died out and the aftereffects of the dust cloud from the eruption of Mt. Pinitubo have faded, so there is the potential for a return to more normal summer weather patterns.

When unhealthful levels of smog are expected, residents can take steps to minimize their exposure. First, they can check local newspapers and listen to the news and weather reports for air pollution forecasts. They can also call the Air Pollution Control District's smog hotline at 565-6626.

When smog levels exceed 138 on the pollutant standard index, the Air District issues a Health Advisory warning both adults and children to avoid prolonged vigorous outdoor exercise. Five health advisory episodes were issued in the county last year.

Air quality in San Diego has been steadily improving for the past 25 years as a result of air pollution controls on industry and automobiles. State clean air standards for smog were exceeded on 90 days in 1993 compared to 158 days in 1987.

However, the air still exceeds state clean air standards one day out of every four with the highest concentrations occurring between now and October.

Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

Yard-sale signs

The economic recession, or depression, depending upon whether one's state being uncomfortable or desperate, is certainly still with us. While we have not yet come to the point where everyone is singing "Brother can you spare a dime?," there is stark evidence of real problems with the family cash flow.

One of these signs of near desperation is the proliferation of yard sales in any community. Where it was once a very uncommon occurrence, it was usually a situation where an almost-affluent family simply wanted to dispose of a lot of accumulated things that were overflowing the capacity of the home. The object was more to clean house than to make money via the transactions.

A recent Saturday morning run through our town was quite revealing. I lost count of the telephone poles that were literally covered with "GARAGE SALE" and "YARD SALE" signs of all shapes and sizes. Some were quite clever, and others were barely legible. All were illegally nailed to utility poles. I also noticed that most all of the poles that were not so adorned, looked as if they had been sprinkled with glitter. A closer look revealed hundreds of nail heads and staples where these signs had previously been posted.

The laws that prohibit such posting have a very serious basis in fact. They are not just to inconvenience yard-sale people, but rather to protect the safety of the utility company workers who must climb the poles. The nails and staples are dangerous and can be life-threatening to anyone who must don the spikes to climb a power pole. One of my high school classmates died shortly after our graduation when he fell from a telephone pole back in Michigan in just such an accident.

Yard sales are strictly limited by our local ordinances. The posting of signs of any kind on utility poles, or any public structure is very specifically prohibited. The fact that our code enforcement officer enjoys a work-free weekend like the rest of our population, does not make Saturday and Sunday a King X cessation of these laws.

We all have the utmost compassion for anyone who is in need financially, or otherwise, but that does not excuse the scofflaws. I would suggest that anyone who plans a yard sale, should consult City Hall for the rules. Then post their signs legally wherever they can, and take them down when the sale is over.

We can have this type of activity, within the laws, and without punitive measures being necessary. Since the signs have addresses, it is possible that in removing them by city staff, a charge could be levied to that property owner. Also the laws broken could be laid at the door of the sale sponsors. Another possibility would be a cadre of "Yard Sale Sign Vigilantes" who tear them down whenever and wherever they are found to be illegal.

None of this would be necessary - if our citizens would just obey the laws. Our meager city staff has more important things to do than tear down illegal yard signs. Our police force, and our senior patrol, likewise, have more serious jobs to do. Why dilute these efforts with needless tasks? Why not obey the laws and we will all be better off for it.

ECEDC task force strategizes

by Steven Saint

East County won't have to reinvent the wheel to take a drive down the road to economic prosperity. The East County Economic Development Council (ECEDC) has found a regional organization to coordinate the area's post-Cold War economic resuscitation: itself.

The ECEDC's Economic Prosperity Task Force will offer up its recommendations tonight at the council's annual meeting. The list includes the creation of five new advisory committees to keep an eye on unfunded mandates, onerous regulations and unfair fees.

Stumping for the connection of highways 52 and 67 and establishing a manufacturing development center are also on the list of the task force, which has been meeting for about four months in hopes of finding a strategy of revitalizing East County's economy.

"We tapped into a tremendous amount of enthusiasm in the community and came up with a structure that would allow the existing organization to address the problems that come up," said ECEDC Director Deanna Weeks. "I will be testifying Friday before the SANDAG board - at their request - about how we have found a way to do it without creating another layer."

The ECEDC was looking for local applications for the San Diego Association of Government's (SANDAG) Economic Prosperity Strategy, mandated by 1990's county Prop. C. The six main goals are insuring rising levels of personal income, encouraging capital facilities to support business expansion, insuring more productive labor force, promoting employment in high-paying industries, reducing the region's cost of living and keeping government expenditures comparable to other regions.

The task force was launched in January amidst talk of identifying a large infrastructure project around which local governments and businesses could rally. The pursuit of a manufacturer's development center, called a "high tech incubator" in the trades, could be one such rallying point.

The incubator is a facility in which new, emerging manufacturers can receive affordable, expandable space, professional consulting services, access to investment money and other necessities to survive their first 18-24 months in developing a new product line, said task force member Michelle Nash Hoff.

"The benefits to the community are the new jobs these manufacturers will provide as well as work for existing companies," said Hoff, a small manufacturers' representative and president of the High Technology Foundation. "Other businesses in El Cajon will work as subcontractors or venders to the companies in the incubator."

The development center would be patterned after the Business Incubator Center now operating in San Diego.

The presentation tonight at the ECEDC annual meeting will include the following recommendations:

- establish advisory committees to the ECEDC board on real estate, education and training, fees and regulations and manufacturing
- organize letter-writing

Commentary

O. J. and the media circus

by Paul Treske

What to say? The phrase "inexpressibly sad" uttered by one of the many commentators on Friday's events would seem to cover it best.

The whole saga of O. J. Simpson's recent years, reaching a kind of climax with Friday's slow motion freeway procession, is, unfortunately, an all too "American" story. An idolized sports icon becomes involved, innocent or guilty, in a horrendous crime, and once again, we explore our values in hero worship.

With the strength and skill of our media, we develop and cherish images of diamond, court or gridiron excellence, and then judge the whole person on this basis alone. We hear and read stories of the uglier sides of their lives but try desperately not to heed them. And then an explosion occurs and we find ourselves bereft between image and reality.

So it is today. This seemingly affable, handsome man, whom we have admired or even loved both on and off the football field, now sits in a cell accused of the most vicious of crimes.

There have been warning signs over recent years: stories of spousal assault and drug use - but they were totally at odds with the public image, we shrugged them off as wild lies or temporary aberrations.

It should not surprise us that those involved in the sanctioned violence of our sports sometimes cross the line. We are a violent people, and our sports have become increasingly violent over recent years. Football, always a game of personal destruction, has become even more intimidating. Basketball, once a game of grace and shooting skill, has evolved into a physically bruising contest of bump and dunk. And baseball, that intellectual duel of mind and body, has seen a steady growth of bean ball and brawl.

Apparently, we like it that way because our entertainers always try to give us what we like. I mean, after all, what is a good game without a riot or knockdown brawl of some kind?

And so, the crime, the finger pointing ever closer to the man and then the ride. The press has dubbed it a "chase," but to me, it seemed more a funeral procession. Simpson wrote a letter, so close to a suicide note that it could hardly be misconstrued and then rode the freeways with a gun held to his head, followed by a phalanx of police cars which sought to keep him in sight and alive.

The final scene, with the nation watching was unbearable as the man sat in the car, apparently unable to take the next inexorable step. Finally, under the cover of darkness, he surrendered.

The legal wheels will now begin to turn and the icon's fate will be in the hands of the lawyers and the media. In his letter, Simpson begged the media to back off for the sake of his children, but this will not be. Those merchants of the sensational have been thrown another hunk of red meat, and they will in the weeks to come, regurgitate it upon us with all its blood, stink and sleaze.

If O. J. Simpson is indeed guilty of this dreadful crime, he should pay dearly. But the necessity of the coming media circus reflects poorly upon us, as well. At this moment, I cannot feel sorry for the man, but I can despise the blood lust in us all at events such as this.

I am not only sad – I am sick of it all. We have apparently progressed little since gladiators died and Christians were clawed to death in the ancient Roman Coliseum.

Huh!

by Phillip Giannangeli

"Huh."

So widespread and versatile. Not even a fullfledged word, it conveys all kinds of meanings, both subtle and obvious.

In my other life, that of a teacher, "Huh" is one of the more frequently grunted utterances I hear all day long. It even rivals some of the longer, more colorful grumblings young people are apt to use.

"Can you tell me what the first 10 amendments to the Constitution are called?"

"Huh?"

This is probably the most common usage of "Huh" by students. It's thrust out in lieu of an answer to a simple question. It's the preeminent stalling technique, eons old, giving time for the one questioned to come up with an acceptable answer. That it sounds so pathetic often goes unnoticed by the victim at the wrong end of the question.

"The ten commandments?"

"Huh?"

Said with just a little higher inflection, this "Huh?" is often used as a disarming mechanism. It's the "Huh?" that comes right after I've exhausted myself and finally accosted some young scoundrel for not responding correctly to the set of directions I had given five separate times. A repeat of that "Huh?" however, alerts me to a condition known as thickheadedness where the constant use of "Huh?" is symptomatic of brainlock. Sadly, there is no known cure for that condition.

The last form of "Huh?" is as a ruse. This usage of "Huh?" pretends not to understand something that is well known. Something like an admonition or threat. "You'd better never do that again!" "Huh?" It is uttered with such innocence, one would think it was the first time such a pronouncement had ever been heard.

"Huh."

As you can see, this is the period form of "Huh." Most of the time it is accompanied by a sigh. Sometimes, it even has a hint of resignation to it. It often falls just short of the question "Huh?" but usually manages to stay on this side of it. This "Huh" is the contemplative "Huh," coming when understanding or acceptance is right around the corner.

"Huh!"

The exclamation "Huh!" is by far the most exciting "Huh" of all. Often it accompanies discovery. "Ah huh! I knew you had it all along." Or it can be the simple "Huh!" that's a revelation. "Huh, I knew you didn't have it in you!"

So there you have it. All the "Huh's" you could want.

Huh?

Huh.

Huh!

And uh, if you'll excuse me, I'll move on. Hmmm, I wonder, "Uh?"

Weeks said the ongoing process will be largely educational, as the various economic players in East County share relevant information. The city of El Cajon's Industrial Zones Review Committee is an example of something other cities can learn from.

"They've had a review committee looking at zoning: is it still appropriate for the types of businesses we depend on today," Weeks said. "The whole idea of the structure is to be able to act and lobby for the things we think are important."

Puppets in the Park

"Puppets in the Park," a three-day, multicultural festival, will bring internationally acclaimed puppet companies from Spain, Canada, and the U.S. to perform in Balboa Park, July 8, 9, and 10. The festival, sponsored by the San Diego Guild of Puppetry, in cooperation with the San Diego Department of Parks and Recreation, celebrates 30 years of puppet plays by the Guild in the park.

The guest puppeteers, with their "puppet folk," will converge at the Marie Hitchcock Puppet Theater in the park, presenting day and evening shows there for both children and adults.

Other events during the Puppets in the Park festival—included in the price of theater tickets—and held on the grounds outside the Marie Hitchcock Puppet Theater, are "walk-around" puppet shows presented by strolling players, story-telling sessions, and a workshop designed to show children how to make and manipulate simple puppets.

In addition, at noontime, puppets will be seen parading on the Prado. Near the Marie Hitchcock Puppet Theater, children can play in a fun zone, and both children and grownups can browse or buy at a store selling puppets and puppetry books. On

On Saturday and Sunday, festival participants, can also view a puppet exhibit sponsored by the San Diego Museum of Art in its traveling "Art Rig," set up near the theater.

Puppet show tickets are $6 for adults, $3.50 for children. Special festival passes are available. For advance ticket sales and information call 1-800-449-4479.

Lemon Grove resident is for the birds

by Lora Clark

Jake Phillips, longtime resident of Lemon Grove, can mimic the chirrup of many different birds. This ability recently provided the means for him to help a bird in distress.

On a recent Friday afternoon, Phillips, who repairs washing machines, was coming home from a service call. He noticed a man walking very slowly and looking all around, so he asked him what he had lost.

"My cockatoo," was the reply, "and he loves people!"

Several longtime members of the Lemon Grove First Baptist Church meet each Saturday morning at a nearby restaurant for breakfast and then drive to the church, where they meet to pray over the needs of the church and its members. It was there that Phillips and the cockatoo found each other.

"When I was walking toward the church building, I heard some chirping, I could hear the bird, but I couldn't see him, so I chirped back. He flew toward me, circled my head, and flew back into a tree – the pine tree that grows next to the ramp that leads to the main entry of the auditorium.

"I went up the ramp and got where I could see him perched on one of the tree limbs. I chirped for three or four minutes. He finally flew to me and landed on my belt buckle. I reached down and very gently put my hands around him. I felt his whole body relax. I knew he was cold, because we'd had a drizzly rain, and I think he had been scared, too, and was glad to see a friendly face."

Jake Phillips enjoys a get-acquainted conversation with Dwebble, his newfound feathered friend.

The Saturday Prayer Group had an unusual member that day, as the cockatoo sat on Phillip's shoulder during the entire meeting, after which Phillips took the bird home and kept it safe until he could return it to its owner.

Phillips is somewhat experienced in helping his fine, feathered friends.

"It was in 1978, when I was working on a construction job in Redlands, California. Three butcher birds had ganged up on a young sparrow hawk. They had knocked him to the ground and were dive-bombing at him, pecking him with their beaks."

Phillips ran the attackers off and brought the fledgling home with him for the weekend.

"He must have known he was safe with me," continued Phillips. "Within two hours, he was eating ground meat out of my hand, and, before the weekend was over, I was handling him without any gloves.

"I called him Chirpy, because he chirped so much."

He took Chirpy back to Redlands on the following Monday.

"I chirped a few times, and his parents came. I threw him up in the air, the parents swooped down, and the three of them flew up into a palm tree.

"That day I was working on a section of the job that was quite a distance from my truck. The guys on the job told me that Chirpy came and sat on my truck several times during the day. He seemed to be waiting for me."

Those who know Phillips agree that this gentle, mild-mannered man is, indeed, for the birds!

Kiwanis Korner

by Del Kay

Recently, the Kiwanis Club of Lemon Grove sent its members out to the local school graduation ceremonies to give out approximately $1,500 in United States Savings Bonds to 10 deserving students at 10 elementary, middle schools, and high schools.

Based upon the reports given by the Kiwanians who gave out the savings bonds, they got as much pleasure out of giving them out as did the students who received them. Rest assured that we are extremely proud of the kids in our community schools; that is why we like being members of Kiwanis.

As members, we achieve enormous personal satisfaction from contributing to the community in a worthwhile way. We enjoy the natural fellowship that results from mutual effort-directed toward the achievement of important community goals.

We take pride in the affiliation with an organization of hundreds of thousands of men and women around the world who feel and act as we feel and act. By taking advantage of these opportunities, we too, can feel the sense of pride and achievement which is common to all men and women who wear the "K."

Your Kiwanis Club of Lemon Grove needs to attract new members so that we can be even more effective in our community. Surely there are a few good men and women in our area who might be interested in being a part of a service club like KIWANIS! If so, why not come and have lunch with us during our regular meeting so you can check us out and see if our club is for you! We would love to have you as a new member! The Kiwanis Club of Lemon Grove meets every Wednesday at noon at the Lemon Grove Community Center, 3146 School Lane. To reserve a seat, write to us at P.O. Box 193, Lemon Grove, CA 91946-0193.

Our Kiwanis Club continues to encourage everyone with a baby to get their babies immunized on a timely basis. The immunization shots are FREE and can be acquired in Lemon Grove at the county Department of Social Services center, 7065 Broadway, on the second Wednesday of each month, 12:30 - 3 p.m., when the Mobile Infant Immunization Unit visits. The next time will be Wednesday, July 13. Put it on your calendar and take advantage of this fine program to protect your baby from disease.

As an additional incentive, your Lemon Grove Kiwanis Club solicited a number of gift certificates from the Lemon Grove Jack in the Box for free Kid's Meals which includes a hamburger, cheeseburger, or two-piece chicken strips, small french fries and a small soft drink.

Pick up your free certificate at the shot clinic and many thanks to the Jack in the Box people.
